Complex Sentences - Identifying independent and dependent clauses

Complex sentences are sentences with at least one independent clause and one dependent clause.

Independent clauses are complete sentences; that is they have a subject and a verb. Dependent clauses cannot exist on their own because they are missing either a subject or a verb. Let's look at examples of the two different types of clauses:

Independent clause: "The child will be next in line [for the throne]..."

Dependent clause "Whether boy or girl,..." This clause is missing a verb.

These two clauses are found in the same sentence in our news story:

"Whether boy or girl, the child will be next in line behind William in the line of succession."

Dependent clauses often begin with subordinating conjunctions: after, although, as, because, before, how, if, once, since, than, that, though, till, until, when, where, whether, while

Here are some more sentences from our third story. Can you identify the independent and the dependent clauses? Answers are in the appendix.

1. "As the first-born child of William -- who is second in line for the throne, the couple's child is likely one day to become king or queen."
2. "There is a new law which gives females equal status with males in the order of succession."
3. "The Duchess returned home after spending four days in hospital."

Transcripts of Weekly news stories

	DECEMBER 7 TH WEEKLY NEWS STORIES	TIME
Introduction	Hi, this is Nirmala Naidoo. You're listening to Learning English with CBC news for December 10th th .	0:00
Story 1	A powerful typhoon has killed close to 400 people in the southern Philippines. Hundreds more are still missing. Most of those people who were killed, were in a steep mountain valley at the time. This farming area often has floods and landslides. Flooding was so widespread there that some places people had thought were safe, including two emergency shelters, were in fact the most dangerous. The government tried to force people out of high-risk areas as the typhoon came close to the Philippines. The Red Cross and Red Crescent are asking for help for people affected by the typhoon.	0:10
Story 2	Britain's royal family announced Monday that Prince William and his wife are expecting their first child. The announcement came as the 30-year-old Duchess of Cambridge, Kate Middleton, had a severe form of morning sickness and was in a London hospital. The announcement said that the pregnancy is in its "very early stages." As the first-born child of William -- who is second in line for the throne, the couple's child is likely one day to become king or queen. Whether boy or girl, the child will be next in line behind William in the line of succession. There is a new law which gives females equal status with males in the order of succession. The Duchess returned home after spending four days in hospital.	01:01
Story 3	Hopeful signs in the National Hockey League labour dispute ended badly last week in a game of one step forward: two steps back. Talks between a small group of players and NHL representatives took place on Tuesday and Wednesday, without NHL boss, Gary Bettman and NHL players' association executive director, Donald Fehr. At first, the sides seemed to move closer but on Thursday night, talks broke down in spectacular fashion. Donald Fehr raised the hopes of hockey fans at a news conference saying the sides were close to an agreement but while he was talking a voice mail was left on his cellphone, saying the NHL was rejecting the players' association's offer. It's left many people wondering how the two sides could come so close together, and yet end so far apart. The NHL lockout has led to the cancellation of 422 regular-season hockey games so far through to December 14th.	02:13
